Dear All

Thoughts of Karl Marx (1818-1883) and Frederick Engels (1820-1895) expressed through their writings extended over a period of almost five decades constitute a body of opinions on a large spectrum of subjects—politics, economics, sociology, culture, history, philosophy, literature, and science, known as Marxism. Whereas writings of John Locke or José Ortega y Gasset end in a blind lane—no matter whether an activist or an academic takes that to work with in his/her respective field, that hardly ever appear as an ideology influencing larger masses. Marxism is a thoroughly different body of theories: something that is ever active as an ideology among the greater public on the streets and as an agenda in the academic institutions—for good or for bad. While Marx has been selected the man of the millennium by the mass media, Marxism remain debated, declared "dead", and then again brought to the fore of intellectual discourse during the 150 years since the publication of the Capital vol. I. In sharp contrast, Francis Fukuyama, who had found the "End of History" in the 1990s, had to swallow back and declare the end of his proposition within two decades.

Looking at the academic arena, Marx's thoughts and works have been willy-nilly syllabified—in the graduate/post graduate courses or as an endless source of Ph. D. themes and, to that extent, form an institutional resource material for the academia on a vast scale. It is possible to argue for or against, but not ignore Marxism.

Standing in between the bicentenary years of birth of these two stalwarts of the nineteenth century, Marx and Engels, it may therefore be worthwhile to take a fresh stock of the system of thoughts they offered to the world. We, therefore, arrange some discourses on different areas of intellection to see how far their ideas may still prove relevant in a practical way.

It is a matter of great pleasure that on 12th September 2019 from 10.30 a.m., the Department of Political Science, Surya Sen Mahavidyalaya is going to organise Seminar Lecture sessions on REVISITING MARXISM ON MARX'S BICENTENNIAL BIRTH ANNIVERSARY.

SPEAKERS:

Dr. Sobhanlal Datta Gupta, Former S. N. Banerjee Professor, Dept. of Political Science, Calcutta University & An eminent Marxist Scholar: On 'Marxism in USSR: A Critical Evaluation'.

Sri Ashoke Mukhopadhyay, Commentator on Marxism and Secretary, Centre for Studies in Science and Society (CESTUSS), Kolkata:

REPORT

Summary: DAY 1 (28th July 2020)

The Speaker of the day was Mr Aditya Kant Ghissing, Assistant Professor, Dept of Political Science, City College, Kolkata. He delivered an enthralling PPT presentation on the theme. In his lecture, he tried to show the present shift in India's foreign policy in which the government wants to look to the countries of the East comprising South-East & South Asian countries along with Australia which were hitherto neglected. The participants actively took part in the question answer session and the interactive session was very lively as has been exemplified by the questions raised in the Chat Box.

Day 2

Smt. Gazala Fareedi delivering her speech

Summary: DAY 2 (29th July, 2020)

The Speaker for day 2 was Miss Gazala Fareedi. She is an Assistant Professor of Political Science, South Field College, Darjeeling. She delivered a lecture on 'Diplomacy and its evolution in the era of Covid-19'. The students engaged with great enthusiasm with the speaker via question and answer round.
